

HARRISON PROTESTS

Judge at the Strothers Trial
Issues Statement.

CLAIMS MISREPRESENTATION

Presiding Magistrate Denies Having Made Final Remarks to Jury, at Culpeper, Va., as Reported in Some Newspapers—Repeats What He Really Did Say on That Occasion.

Winchester, Va., March 16.—Judge James W. Harrison, of the Circuit Court, who presided at the trial of the Strothers brothers at Culpeper, Va., in an interview today states that he has been misrepresented in many papers with regard to his final remarks to the jury. Judge Harrison emphatically denies that he used the words:

"Gentlemen of the jury, I thank you for the verdict which, I think, will be approved by the public. It is an established precedent in the State of Virginia that no man tried for defending the sanctity of the home should be found guilty."

What Judge Harrison said.

The exact language used by Judge Harrison was, he says, as follows:

"In regard to the law that I have given for your guidance, I have taken the instruction most likely to give to debate, word for word, from an instruction which our highest court sanctioned. Your verdict, gentlemen, of the following precedent of American juries generally so far as they have come under my observation. Law books may lay down correct doctrine, but American juries lay down correct doctrine. That American juries lay down correct doctrine, I am sure, if that other, by aggravating and damnable treachery, invades the sanctity of his home circle and destroys its peace."

All Court Could Ask.

"You have listened to the evidence with scrupulous care; you have been assisted by able and eloquent representatives of the Commonwealth and the defense to reach a righteous verdict. I know you to be men of high character and purpose, and the verdict is in accordance with the dictates of your conscience. This is all the court could ask, and with it the court is satisfied."

Judge Harrison states that his remarks to the jury were intended to emphasize the significance of the verdict, that in spite of a trial conducted in strict accordance with the written laws, a jury will acquit in these certain cases which he designated in what he said to the jury.
